Much has been written regarding individual Pullman cars and the services in which they operated in Ireland & Scotland in the 1920's to the 1930s. Then from 1874 onwards the following railways within the Southern, Western, Eastern and Midland Regions that made up British Railways from 1948. A major part of Pullman operations that has as far as I am aware has never been addressed is the identity of members of the on-board crew i.e., Attendant, Leading Attendant, Attendant in Charge, Steward, Kitchen Porter, Chef, Conductors, and Inspectors in the period 1874 to the final Pullman cars withdrawal from main line service in 1985 of the "Manchester Pullman" (BR Mk2 introduced in 1966).

Uniforms.

Attendants pre-second world war were dressed in a three-piece dark blue uniform with cap. This was changed after the war to the distinctive crisp white shell-type jacket with blue lapels and cuffs, brass buttons and badges, navy blue waistcoats, and trousers with a light blue stripe. With this uniform no caps were issued to attendants. Leading attendants and attendants-in-charge wore blue shoulder cords, while gold cords indicated the rank of conductor. White shirt and collar with a black tie - bow ties were encouraged - completed the uniform.

Lady attendants wore a similar uniform to their male colleagues with the exception of a navy-blue skirt with a light blue stripe. Golden Arrow staff wore special lapel badges. The jackets of those on the Queen of Scots, for a while, were faced with a green Scottish plaid.

Conductors originally wore navy blue frock coats and trousers. The coats were faced with gold braid. The frock coat was subsequently replaced by a short jacket. Conductors were also issued with caps. The Golden Arrow conductor was issued with two caps, one regular, the other a sea-going type with a short peak to wear on the channel boat for the crossing. Inspectors wore a dark two-piece black braided uniform with caps. Later the braid was omitted from the uniform. As appropriate overcoats and raincoats were issued to inspectors and conductors.

The staff superintendent was responsible for the purchase and the issue of uniforms. Everything was accounted for down to the last button and staff were expected to take care of their uniforms just as if they were their own private clothes.

I detail those identified members of on-board crew by Surname and Christian name followed by their Pullman Car Company identity badge number if known and finally their identified role or roles with any additional information. This is not a definitive list; I would appreciate being advised of any errors and/or additional names that I can add to this document.

I would appreciate as much information as known, ideally to include the following: -

1. Their full name and if known employed/Role as i.e., Attendant or Chef etc.
2. Attendants had their allocated identity number on the unique small badge worn on the one of the two blue lapels i.e., 297, not to be confused with the number on the reverse side of the Pullman Coat of Arms worn on both blue lapels.
3. To add the personal identity any photograph preferably scanned into 'jpg' format that you would like to share, contact me via e-mail at t.bye2@outlook.com

@ Seconded Trainee Pantry Assistant (STPA).

The Railway Restaurant Car Management often provided additional STPA staff to Pullman for certain training or experience. Whether they became ultimately Pullman-employed is currently unknown. (Information Source: Dr Antony Ford).
